COVID-19 is caused by a novel coronavirus-a new coronavirus strain (27) has not been previously found in people. Symptoms include respiratory problems, fever, and cough, and can lead to pneumonia and death. Like SARS, it's spread through droplets from sneezes.

The first reported case in China appeared November 17, 2019, in the Hubei Province, but went unrecognized. Eight more (28) appeared in December with researchers pointing to an unknown virus.

 (29) people learned about COVID-19 when ophthalmologist Dr. Li Wenliang defied government orders and released safety information to other doctors. The following day, China informed WHO and charged Li with a crime. Li died from COVID-19 just over a month later. Without a vaccine (30) , the virus spread beyond Chinese borders, and by mid-March, it had spread globally to more than 163 countries. On February 11, the infection was officially christened COVID-19.

Exercise 11: Read the following passage and mark the letter A, B, C, or D to indicate the correct answer to each of the following questions.

A recent study suggests that teens' relationship with parents, friends and teachers may have a lot to do with why they don't get a good night's sleep.

David Maume, a sociologist and sleep researcher, analyzed federal health data, which interviewed 974 teenagers when they were 12, and then again at He found that family dynamics have much to do with how well kids sleep. Teens, who had warm relations with their parents and felt like they could talk to them or their parents were supportive of them, tended to sleep better. However, families that were going through a divorce or a remarriage tended to affect teens' sleep.

And problems at school also affected teens' sleep. Feeling safe at school and having good relations with teachers tended to promote better sleep. As did good relationships with friends. Kids who took part in sports or other positive social activities or shared similar academic goals with their friends were also more likely to get a good night's sleep.

These add up to what makes lots of sense: a general feeling of well-being helps teens sleep. If we're happy and contented, we're much more likely to sleep better than if we're sad and anxious.

Now, of course, teens can hardly resist being drawn to their computers and social networking. Maume also found that when parents were strict not only about bedtime, but also about limiting technology, kids slept better. It's a finding that seems obvious, but parents really do matter when it comes to health habits of their teenagers. Clearly, teenagers aren't getting 9 to 10 hours a night, which puts them at risk for all the consequences of lack of sleep, including poor academic performance, colds and stress.

- B. Lack of adequate sleep puts teens at risk of many bad consequences.
- C. Modern technology has something to do with teens' sleep problems.
- D. It is necessary for teens to join in sports and positive social activities.

Question 40: According to Maume's analysis, who will probably have a poor night's sleep?

Exercise 12: Read the following passage and mark the letter A, B, C, or D to indicate the correct answer to each of the following questions.

It is natural for young people to be critical of their parents at times and to blame them for most of the misunderstandings between them. They have always complained, more or less justly, that their parents are out of touch with modern ways; that they are possessive and dominant; that they do not trust their children to deal with crises; that they talk too much about certain problems, and that they have no sense of humor, at least in parent-child relationships. I think it is true that parents often underestimate their teenage children and also forget how they themselves felt when they were young. Young people often irritate their parents with their choices in clothes and hairstyles, in entertainers and music. This is not their motive. They feel cut off from the adult world into which they have not yet been accepted. So they create a culture and society of their own. Then, if it turns out that their music or entertainers of vocabulary or clothes or hairstyles irritate their parents, this gives them additional enjoyment. They feel they are superior, at least in a small way, and that they are leaders in style and taste.

Sometimes you are resistant and proud because you do not want your parents to approve of what you do. If they approve, it looks as if you are betraying your own age group. But in that case, you are assuming that you are the underdog; you cannot win; but at least you keep your honor. This is a passive way of looking at things. It is natural enough after long years of childhood, when you were completely under your parents' control. But it ignores the fact that you are now beginning to be responsible for yourself.

If you plan to control your life, cooperation can be part of that plan. You can charm others, especially your parents, into doing things the way you want. You can impress others with your sense of responsibility and initiative, so that they will give you the authority to do what you want to do.

Travel at the North and South Poles has become an expensive leisure activity, suitable for tourists of all ages. The poles may be inhospitable places, but they are seeing increasing numbers of visitors. Annual figures for the Arctic, where tourism has existed since the 19th century, have increased from about a million in the early 1990s to more than 1.5 million today. This is partly because of the lengthening summer season brought about by climate change.

The global economic downturn may have affected the annual 20.6 percent rate of increase in visitors to the Antarctic - last season saw a drop of 17 percent to 38,200 - but there has been a 760 percent rise in land-based tourism there since 1997. More people than ever are landing at fragile sites, with light aircraft, helicopters and all-terrain vehicles increasingly used for greater access.

Although polar tourism is widely accepted, there have been few regulations up until recently. At the meeting of the Antarctic Treaty in Baltimore, the 28 member nations adopted proposals for limits to tourist numbers. These included safety codes for tourist vessels in Antarctic waters, and improved environmental protection for the continent. They agreed to prevent ships with more than 500 passengers from landing in Antarctica, as well as limit the number of passengers going ashore to a maximum of 100 at any one time, with a minimum of one guide for every 20 tourists.

These days, rarely a week passes without a negative headline in the newspapers. The suffering polar bear has become a symbol of a warming world, its plight a warning that the clock is ticking. It would seem that this ticking clock is a small but growing factor for some tourists. 'There's an element of "do it now",' acknowledges Prisca Campbell, Marketing director of Quark Expeditions, which takes 7,000 people to the poles annually. Leaving the trip until later, it seems, may mean leaving it too late.

(Adapted from Complete IELTS by Guy Brook-Hart and Vanessa Jakeman)

Question 33: The word 'they' in paragraph 3 refers to _____

- A. member nations
- B. tourist vessels
- C. proposals
- D. passengers

Question 34: According to the passage, what does Prisca Campbell say about the trend of Arctic tourism?

- A. Tourists are excited about the prospect of Arctic tourism more than they were in the past.
- B. Tourists have very little concern about the endangered polar bears suffering potential extinction.
- C. Tourists believe that opportunities to visit the Arctic may soon become scarce.
- D. Tourists believe that they are living in a great era for Arctic exploration.

Question 35: Which of the following is true, according to the passage?

- A. The number of tourists to the Arctic circle has more than doubled since the 1990's.
- B. Climate change has played no part in accelerating the growth of tourism in Antarctica.
- C. Various restrictions have been introduced recently to limit the growing polar tourist numbers.
- D. The polar bears which are still alive today face an enormous amount of suffering at the hands of tourists.

Exercise 9: Read the following passage and mark the letter A, B, C, or D to indicate the correct answer to each of the questions from 36 to 42.

The Indian word nimba means a tree which provides good health. According to Hindu custom, on the Hindu New Year's Day, it is a custom to eat a few tender nimba leaves.

The nimba is also known as the neem tree. It has been grown in India for centuries. The neem is an extremely useful tree with small leaves, sweet-smelling flowers and small fruit. It is a fast grower, acts as a windbreak, is resistant to insects and needs little water. It will grow in salty soil and is long living.

That is why in a country like Oman, one of the Arab nations, the neem has been widely planted. Oman is dry and hot. Neem trees line roadways. They add greenery to parks in a land where greenery is not common.

Although the neem tree is deciduous, it doesn't lose all its leaves at once. It allows a glow of gold to affect some of the leaves and renews its foliage slowly as summer approaches.

Experiments in Oman have shown that on blistering hot days the temperature under the neem tree can be up to eight degrees lower.

In India, few villages are without a neem tree. It is more or less a backyard chemist shop. Much of the folk medicine has been supported by scientific discoveries: 135 chemical compounds have been isolated. One chemical is an insect repellent, while others stop swelling, fight tuberculosis, or reduce pain. It can be a gargle for sore throats and is used in the treatment of diabetes, leprosy, and malaria. Scientists are investigating claims that the tree is an air purifier. Boiled leaves provide a treatment for skin infections. The small, knobby nuts provide oil for the treatment of head lice. Many Indians make and eat neem leaf chutney for good health. It seems the neem tree can cure almost any complaint.

Farmers use the trees as a pesticide and to protect their crops from fungus and insect disease. Termites avoid the tree. It is no wonder it is called "the world in a tree".
